Hello!

As a concerned end-user, I would like to state my belief that the proposed final judgement in United States v. Microsoft is flawed and inadequate in its current form. I am especially distressed that the proposed decision fails to prohibit anti-competitive license terms currently used by Microsoft. The continued prohibition in EULAs and other licenses against open source applications running on Windows platforms, as well as restrictive licensing terms designed to prevent Windows applications from running on competing operating systems is simply unacceptable. For genuine competition to occur, interoperability must be allowed.

Sincerely,
Chad Eby
